BY BLAKE SPIRES ASST. EDITOR

A traffic stop early Sunday evening by Columbia Police spawned a lengthy vehicle pursuit, a confrontation with officers, and the eventual arrest of an Adair County man on multiple charges.

Around 6:30 p.m. Sunday, Columbia Police Ofc. Josh Brockman, assisted by Ofc. Jordan Dean, stopped a 1998 Jaguar operated by 54-year-old Thomas Cheaney of Columbia after reckless

City Council Moves Forward With Occupational Tax

By Wes Feese Editor

The Columbia City Council approved a recommendation Tuesday night to implement a one-percent occupational tax as a means to generate revenue and bring the city's budget back to fiscal stability.

The recommendation came after Councilor June Parson delivered a PowerPoint presentation of the data collected by the council's revenue committee, which consists of Robert Flowers and Craig Dean, along with Parson. The trio had analyzed Columbia's finances from 1993 through 2013, and then compared their findings with revenue information from other towns across the state. While Columbia was in line with its peers on most counts, the glaring difference was the lack of an occupational tax, which the committee said was essential to move Columbia forward and grow the local economy.

"Of all the wonderful things we have here, we cannot compete with cities and counties that have the funding to bring these jobs in," Flowers said.

The financial breakdown that Parson presented showed that Columbia's current state of low cash and stagnant revenue has been several years in the making. From 2003 through 2013,

The wet/dry debate in Adair County has reached a fever pitch of late, as signatures are currently being collected at local businesses to bring the matter to vote via Special Election. While the petition has yet to be turned in to the County Clerk's office for verification, and interim County Clerk Joyce Rodgers says that it's far from a done deal that the issue will even be put to vote, Wes Feese and Blake Spires presented opposing arguments on the proposed legislation this week, highlighting both the pros and cons of Adair County going wet or staying dry.

Of course Adair County should be wet. The legal, regulated, and monitored sale of alcohol can only benefit this community. Going wet will be a boon to the financial, social, physical, and moral health of Adair County

First and foremost, even though the influx of additional local tax dollars won't solve all of this community's financial problems, it will be a tremendous help. Our city government is operating on razor thin margins and our county government owns a hospital that is millions of dollars in debt, so

Of course Adair County should remain dry. To allow the sale of alcohol could only harm this wonderful community. Staying dry protects our small town charm, our moral integrity, the health of our citizens, and the future of our children.

While Columbia may have a few financial problems, they are nothing that would be fixed by going wet. Wet communities all around us face financial problems as well, and the idea that allowing alcohol sales would remedy those revenue woes is naïve and shortsighted.

Westlake Re-Engages With Auditor

By Blake Spires Asst. Editor

In a special-called session late Monday night, the Adair County Hospital District gathered in the board room at Westlake Regional Hospital to discuss a potential agreement with 2013 auditor Blue & Co. Following a brief discussion, the board agreed with reengage with Blue & Co. for the 2014 fiscal year.

Blue & Co., an auditing firm based out of Louisville, prepared Westlake's 2013 financial audit as well as the hospital's Medicaid, Medicare and Home Health cost reports, which are then turned in to those companies to establish ongoing rates for payment. Under the current agreement, Blue & Co. would provide those services again for 2014.

"Blue has a certain expertise in submitting those reports," Chairman Richard Grant explained. "They're a tremendous amount of work, and we found that this hospital hadn't been submitting a complete one

Editorial Commentary Written By Wes Feese, EDITOR

This editorial is a first for me. I've often written about world and national politics and given my opinions, but in an effort to remain objective about the stories I cover, I've shied away from commenting on local politics. I've always just tried to present facts and let readers form their own opinions.

This pending occupational tax though, which you can read about on the front page, is different. It will impact my life in both the short term, by taking a bite out of my paycheck every month, but also the long term, because I live in Columbia and don't really have any plans to go anywhere else. As much as I hate to see an additional tax, I believe it's needed, and I hope we use the revenue wisely.

Of all the points made in Tuesday night's meeting (and there were many), the ones that I found most important centered on economic development. Thirty percent of the revenue from the tax (assuming it passes) will go to economic development: the creation and retention of jobs. I like this idea, but I also have some fears, fears that I know a lot of people in the community share.

It will be tragic if the people of Columbia are additionally taxed and the money is given to a business recruiter that fails to bring industry to the area. We've seen this before in our community, and not only is it a waste of money, it puts the community more at odds with our local leaders instead of everyone being on the same page, finger pointing ensues. This shouldn't happen anymore.

A smarter person mighthave some suggestions on alternatives to the pay-a-recruiter method, but I'm not that guy. If I had the solution to bringing jobs into the area, I would have already shared it and basked in the glory of helping my town. That's not happening though. The best I can do is reflect on what has failed before, and hope we avoid repeating those mistakes.

But make no mistake, the tax is necessary. I've attended every single council meeting for the past 30 months, and I know there's nothing left to cut. I've seen the councilors examine the budget line by line, cutting everything but essential services to reduce spending, even if some of the savings only amounted to "nickels and dimes," as Robert Flowers likes to put it.

I know the Police Dept. has been criticized for eating too much into the budget, but the only feasible cuts in that department would be removing the School Resource Ofc. and the undercover policeman. This is a sacrifice that I don't believe the community wants or needs. There's nothing more important than our students'safety, and judging by the recent flood of drug arrests, the undercover work by the department has been quite successful.

The 20-percent obligated to Parks and Recreation is important to me as well. I've thought before that the miniscule amount put into Parks and Rec, only $8,000 in 2013, was a waste of money. Don't get me wrong, I'm for increasing the Parks budget, but a few thousand bucks isn't enough to really do anything it barely covers maintenance. If all we can do is maintain a few patches of grass and some old playground equipment, that eight grand is better spent elsewhere. If Parks had a real budget though, with money for a city pool, ball field, rec leagues, and other attractions, the expense would be more than worth it.

I know not everyone will agree with my thoughts. That's usually a good thing, and I look forward to the public hearing on the matter where other Columbia residents can share theirown views and opinions. In the meantime, feel free to send us letters about your own thoughts on the proposed tax.

> Banking In Early Adair County

Rarely does a day pass that I'm not in contact with someone concerning history and genealogy of Adair County and/or the surrounding counties. Rarely does a day pass that I don't learn a new fact--or a multitude of facts--about the history of this county, the people and events that have shaped. Most know that I am avid researcher and dig into piles of seemingly useless material (seemingly useless to some) to find a thread or a shred. Rarely am I surprised when I find a long-lost bit of information that will make someone's day. I am surprised regularly when a fact I have known for decades is a new gem to someone else. However, I should not be surprised for every person is a storehouse of "trivial" knowledge that could help another researcher fill in a missing jig-saw puzzle piece. Looking Back began as an outlet for my research in 1983 and, with some gaps, has never ended. As long as I have a reader or two, the Progress continues to put up with me and our shared love for local history, and my arthritic fingers can bang out a few sentences, I shall persevere. Occasionally I'm taken to task by a long-time reader for dwelling on "ancient" history, crime, dark history and the like. My answer is nearly the same each time--There was so much of that and it is what generates more feedback and more questions of other, similar incidents. So, I continue on, but do try to sprinkle in some nice, quiet life experiences from time to time. The past ten days have included: 61 emails, 5 snail mail letters, 7 phone calls, 17 face to face conversations. Three were trips to the woodshed, the others were not. A good ten days in my opinion. But this week, something a little different perhaps...

There was a time in this nation when life expectancy was a mere fifty years. People worked hard all their lives. Life was hard for most, but life was generally good. There were rich, poor, and those in between. All wished to better their way of life. With better times came the likelihood of longer life. With tragedy came knowledge. With the Civil War came much new medical knowledge; surgery procedures improved, medications developed. Mothers and babies died young. Today many obstacles have been overcome and centenarians are not unusual. Two centuries ago, to live to age 100 was very unusual; a century ago almost a unusual. The following is a short list of a few Adair Countians who lived more than three score and ten, from the pages of the Adair County News, January-May 1900.

Dr. W.B. Montgomery--Last Monday night the subject of this note peacefully passed from death unto life. He was about 80 years of age, an excellent citizen, and the oldest practitioner of Adair County. He was a man of strong convictions and his opinions given

A Hope For Our Nation

Dear Editor,

The signs are all around us. It's time that our nation returns to God. We as a people seem to have forgotten that our nation was founded on the ways of God.

We have now become a nation of greed. We have lost our compassion for our fellow man. Our focus on our self seems to be the common creed. We no longer take notice of our fellow man's troubles and trials.

When will we wake from our slumber? The day is at hand to return to God. The temptations of today's world can be overwhelming, but we must remember the promise found in His Word; Greater is He that is in me than he that is in the world.

Let us awake and return to God. Let us lay down our greed and become a compassionate people again. May God change our hearts and minds and teach us to love unselfishly. May He help us return to the old paths and walk therein.

My hope for our nation is that the love, peace, and joy of our Lord fills our hearts, souls, and minds. May He teach us to seek after His ways with our whole being.

May God bless each and every one as we walk through this journey of life together.

> God bless, Mickey Rooks Columbia, Ky.

Lawmakers and School Officials: Stay Out Of Our Bodily Wastes

BY LAURA FINLEY, GUEST COMMENTARY

Why is it that the same conservatives who so desperately want 'big government" out of our lives are at the same time so darn eager to have officials involved in our urination? Despite major studies showing that suspicion-less drug testing is not an effective means of identifying or deterring drug use, state and federal officials continue to promote it. That is true of both school-based drug testing and random workplace testing.

In 2011, Florida Governor Rick Scott (a Republican) attempted to require anyone seeking benefits from the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families program to submit a urine sample. No suspicion was required, nor was any previous arrest or conviction for a drugrelated offense required. Being poor was the only suspicion needed. Federal courts declared the program unconstitutional, although Scott spent nearly $400,000 fighting the court's decision. And Florida spent $118,140 reimbursing the 3,938 TANF applicants who tested negative for drugs. Only 2.6 percent of people who were tested during the four months that the Florida program was in operation had results positive for drugsóa rate far lower than drug use among the general public. In fact, more than three times lower than the 8.13 percent of Floridians over the age of 12 who are estimated by the federal government to use illegal drugs. Tennessee's program saw only one person out of the 800 who applied for assistance test positive.

In 2012, Georgia passed the Social Responsibility and much respect. He was the father of Hon. J.F. Montgomery, this city, Accountability Act, a virtual carbon copy of the recently-debunked and Dr. Ulysses Montgomery, of Louisville. He was a consistent Florida law, which requires all benefits recipients to pass a drug Christian gentle-man and was ready to meet his God. He lived in test. Note the name of the law, which highlights the disgusting the vicinity of Joppa and his place will be hard to fill. 17 January assumption that persons receiving benefits cannot be trusted to be socially responsible or accountable unless they take a piss test. In all, at least 28 states introduced some type of drug testing for benefits recipients in 2012. The infatuation with drug testing poor people has not ended. In early August, Republican Governor Paul LePage of Maine announced his plan to drug test people applying

54 AND CANNOT GET HIRED

A FEATURE COMMENTARY BY PAM CAPOZZIELLO

When we were all in our younger years, for the most part, home also. everything in life seemed to just fall into place. Most of us did not worry about losing jobs or material things, we just went out and got another one. We had "youth" and having youth seems to be what the economy is choosing to be the number one preference for "living"...period.

In 2009, while living in Florida, my worst fears all came crashing down on me when the economy took a nosedive. Many people were tragically affected, both financially and emotionally. I had a good job working as a receptionist for a large orthopedic practice. I knew my job well and performed it to the best of my ability. Never once did it occur to me that I may lose it, and most of my fellow coworkers agreed with me. I was overconfident and that was not a good thing to be in 2009.

One day while sitting at my desk and on the phone scheduling an appointment, Human Resources stopped by my desk and asked me to please report to their office once I was finished with the phone

I walked in the office and honestly thought the reason I was pulled in was for maybe a message of praise for something I had done. Instead, the words were, "I am very sorry to tell you this, but as of right now you are terminated."

I was totally stunned and speechless. I bawled like a baby. I felt like a load of bricks just landed on me and flattened me to the ground. I was soon to learn that this pattern of "immediate termination" had also spread to many of my fellow co-workers, all with no prior warnings.

I never had any write-ups of any sort nor verbal warnings, just told to pack up my stuff and leave immediately. While living in Florida one must understand that Florida is the "no fault" state-there doesn't need to be any reason for one to get fired...you just

Following that traumatic time, I had no choice but to sell my condo. I could not afford mortgage payments anymore and unemployment gives you far too little to make ends meet. So proceedings started for the short sale and now I faced losing my Coming here to Kentucky recently, I was hoping to get a fresh, clean start of life. At 54 years of age I felt I was well deserving of one. I had done my time and worked hard in life, now life needed to help me.

I got hired through Staff Management working for Amazon.com for a month. I tried the best I could there but could not make the required numbers so I was fired.

They told me to come back in 90 days and reapply. I was rehired for the holiday help in December 2013. While there, I came down with a horrible virus and lost some days of work. It was the worst virus I have ever had in my life, and it lasted for more than two weeks. They laid me off right before Christmas Eve, and I actually was not surprised because I was there just for the extra cash for the holidays. They did tell me they wanted me to come back there and to please reapply.

I reapplied again but was refused due to a supposed "production warning," which I knew nothing about. Now they tell me I'm no longer eligible to even apply there.

The biggest employer in Columbia, Wal-Mart, has a hiring system that is basically run by their computer. I am sure many people apply there, as it is the closest for people living in the area. I have applied there too many times to even count--my PC is overloaded with accounts from possible employment opportunities.

The Columbia-Adair County Chamber of Commerce and Lindsey Wilson College will be hosting the eighth annual Wares Fare tonight from 6 p.m to 8 p.m in the Holloway Health and Wellness Center.

The Fair provides area businesses the opportunity to showcase the goods and services available in the community to the students, faculty and staff of Lindsey Wilson College. Each year, the event attracts nearly 500 students, faculty and staff, and there is no charge for current Chamber of Commerce members to set up a booth—only a required donation of a door prize with a retail value of at least $25.

Business owners will be able to set up their displays today from 3-5:30 p.m., and students will be available to help carry boxes. While businesses are not permitted to sell anything, they may give away information, pens, pencils or other trinkets that help promote their business.

Door prizes will be given away all evening, with four grand prize drawings held at the end of the Fair. This year's grand prizes are $250 shopping sprees to a business in Adair County.

CAIP is designed to provide farmers with incentives to allow them to improve and diversify their current production practices through its 10 investment areas, which include:

- Agricultural Diversification
- Farm Infrastructure
- Fencing & On-Farm Water
- On-Farm Energy
- Technology & Leadership Development
- Animal Large (beef, dairy, equine)
- Animal Small (goat, bee, sheep, rabbit) Forage & Grain Improvement
- Poultry & Other Fowl Value-Added & Marketing

death. He leaves and wife and four or five children. 24 January

Moses Medaris was born July 13, 1814, died Jan. 20, 1900. He was married Feb. 15, 1845, to Martha Murrell, and to them were born six children, three boys and three girls, all of whom are still living and the widow to mourn the loss of their father and husband. Mr. Medaris had lived in the Glensfork creek country for several years, and was a good neighbor... The writer conducted a short service at the home of the deceased, after which he was laid to rest in the Garnett graveyard... (signed) J.A. Johnson. 7 February 1900.

Lee Webb, of color, who was perhaps one of the oldest women in the state, died two miles from Columbia Thursday morning. She was between 110 and 120 years old. Her exact age could not be arrived at, but it is known that she was brought from Virginia to this county in 1779*. Her sight was good as when young at the time she was taken sick. 7 February 1900. [*Not likely "1779" as the first settlement in what is now Adair County was 1789 or 1790--MCW]

Mr. James Squires--Last Monday afternoon the subject of this sketch surrendered all earthly hopes and went to meet his God. He was in his 85th year and was one of the best and most respected citizens of this county... "Uncle Jim," as he was familiarly called, lost his wife some years ago. He was not the father of any children, and since the death of Mrs. Squires, he has been kindly cared for by two of his wife's nephews--H.C. And Jas. Suddarth... There are many surviving relatives of the deceased in the county. Dr. J.H. Grady, of this city, was his nephew, and Mrs. Nannie White and Miss Sallie Field were his nieces... Interment was in the family burying ground, near his late residence. 28 February 1900.

Mrs. Susan Thomas, an old lady, 89 years old, died at her home near Neatsville last Wednesday night. 7 March 1900, Pellyton letter.

Mrs. Mary Burton, of this city, is undoubtedly the most active woman in the county of her age. She will be 87 years old her next birthday... 14 March 1900.

One of the oldest men in this section of country is uncle Henry Keltner. He is about 80 years old, and he made a trip to Columbia one day last week horseback. 14 March 1900,

Mrs. Martha Medaris was born in Adair County, Kentucky July 29, 1817, and died at her home, near Glenville, March 13, 1900. She was the daughter of John and Mary Murrell, who long since passed from earth to heaven. She was a sister of Rev. S.L. Murrell, of the Louisville Conference, who was for four years Presiding Elder of the Columbia District. She was the last of her father's family, save one, Jesse Q. Murrell, once a merchant of this town, and now living in Fort Worth, Texas. He is now nearly ninety years old and is in good health. She was married to Moses Medaris, February 15, 1845, who departed this life about two months since in hope of a blessed immortality, and she has quickly gone to join him on the other bright shore to part no more. She was converted when quite young and joined the Methodist church, and for nearly seventy years walked in the light of God's truth... (signed) Jesse L. Murrell. 21 March 1900.

Mr. Oscar Pile, being in his 81st year... 25 April 1900.

Mrs. Susan Russell, mother of Mr. J.O. Russell, was quite sick last week, but at this writing her condition is greatly improved. She is perhaps the oldest lady in Columbia, being in her 87th year. 16 May 1900.

Mr. James Bryant, Milltown, was in town last week and left a dollar with the News. Mr. Bryant is 80 years old and from his first vote, has never wavered in the support of the Democratic party. 30 May 1900.

Uncle James O. Nelson, who is in his 90th year of age, passed through our place one day last week on a visit to his son, James Nelson, of Bliss. Uncle Jimmie is in good health and expressed himself as being pleased with the way our state affairs were settled. 30 May 1900, Gradyville.

Homeplace on Green River 211 Years in the Making

When Isaac Tate built his home in what is now Taylor County in 1803, he could not have known that 211 years later the land he chose would still be a working farm and one of Kentucky's most promising future tourist attractions. Nor could he have known that students of all ages from surrounding counties would be using his farm, now Homeplace on Green River, as an outdoor classroom. But he probably would have been pleased.

What did it take for Mr. Tate's farm to become what it is today—a working tribute to Kentucky's rural heritage?

Homeplace has been the home to only three families in its 207 years—the Tates, the Buchanans and the Halls. The original Tate home remains the centerpiece of farm and is being restored. The latter two families added to the original home, but the original structure Tate built remains as a key part of the home. Three generations of Tates owned the farm between 1803 and 1906 when the Henry A. Buchanan family purchased it. The Buchanans diversified the farm operations to include fruit, vegetables, feed crops and dairy cattle. In 1954, the Buchanan family sold the farm to the Hall family, and Hall brothers Buster and Carl developed a very successful cattle business. The Hall family the sold the farm in 2001 to establish Homeplace on Green River.

The idea of Homeplace on Green River was conceived in the late 1990s. Located in Taylor County, on highway 55 between Campbellsville and Columbia, Homeplace is a 227 acre working farm being restored as a permanent reminder for all ages of the role agriculture has played and is continuing to play in our lives. Three counties, Adair, Green and Taylor, formed a foundation and established a board with representation from all three counties. The farm was purchased with funds from the Farmland Protection Program and is a 501(c) (3) not for profit organization. Six counties, Adair, Green, Taylor, Monroe, Cumberland and Metcalf (The Heartland Waterways Corridor) have designated Homeplace as a hub tourist attraction.

Restoration continues on an 19th century bank barn and several other historic outbuildings. Projects for construction of new buildings and development of other facilities including an animal holding and presentation facility, a replica of a tenant home (and residence for a caretaker) and a butterfly garden are also underway or planned. An early 1800s chestnut log tobacco barn donated to Homeplace by the Clayton Sullivan family was removed from the Sullivan farm in Marion County and is being reassembled at Homeplace.

But buildings are not the only attraction at Homeplace. The farm has registered and secured the name "Kentucky's Outdoor Classroom" with Kentucky's Secretary of State. It serves both public and private schools. An active committee of local and state educators is developing plans to increase use of Homeplace as an educational opportunity. Lindsey Wilson College has been particularly active at Homeplace with students and faculty regularly using the farm as an outdoor classroom. Campbellsville University has also been involved in volunteering at the farm.

One of the two trail heads for the new Tebbs Bend-Green River Nature area trail system is at Homeplace. Five miles of well-marked walking trails traverse the restored Blue Heron Wetlands, meandering streams, forest and prairie environments. Wood ducks, cranes, eagles, wild turkeys, beaver, deer, otter, muskrat and many other species of birds and animals may be seen from the trails.

Homeplace has been the site of seven weddings in the past three years, and at least one more is scheduled for this fall. Scout units from several counties use Homeplace regularly for camp outs and other outdoor activities. There are two annual family events at Homeplace, an antique tractor and gas engine show in June, and the Annual Fall Heritage Festival coming up this year, Saturday, Sept. 6. More information on the Festival is at www.homeplacefarm.org.

Homeplace on Green River is well established with a rich history of national, state, and community support. Since receiving its 501 (c)(3) status in 2002, it has been granted over $850,000 in funding from 15 organizations and agencies. The three county governments, The Nature Conservancy, U.K. Cooperative Extension Service, TOUR Southern and Eastern Kentucky (TOURSEKY), Tebbs Bend Battlefield Association, Heartland Waterways Corridor, Kentucky Departments of Agriculture, Forestry, and Fish and Wildlife, USDA Natural Resources and Conservation Services and others are playing a role in the restoration of the farm. There are no paid employees at Homeplace on Green Homeplace depends for its on-going labor and operational expenses on leasing its cropland, memberships, donations, grants and a considerable number of volunteers. The total 400 acres that comprise The Homeplace on Green River and the adjacent Tebbs Bend/Green River Nature area owned by Taylor County is listed on the National Register of Historic Places.

The Tates, Buchanans and Halls all helped bring Mr. Tate's farm to where it is today. Homeplace on Green River will continue to add to the legacy of one of the area's most historic and productive farms as it expands its plans not only to be Kentucky's Outdoor Classroom, but also to help preserve Kentucky's agricultural heritage.

For further information about Homeplace contact the Taylor County Extension Office at (270) 465-4511 or go to www.homeplacefarm.org.

It Takes A Village

Extension programs typically require a lot of planning, teamwork, and the support of local volunteers. The proverb "it takes a village.." often applies to the type of work we do in Extension. Last week, nothing short of a village came together to make an upcoming Extension program become a reality. Despite the planning, teamwork, and support of local volunteers, sometimes programs do not become a reality due to a variety of reasons. Timing, logistics, and funding are just a few of the obstacles that can temporarily derail us from our mission. Last week we saw some unpredicted issues arise in a program we had been planning for later this fall. While we were a bit disappointed, we decided there was not a need to give up. We just needed a plan B.

Quickly plan B was developed last Tuesday. The original plans were replaced with a Field Day to demonstrate a variety of cover crops and winter annual forages on a local farm. Our plan B was a much more difficult task and was going to require even more effort than the original plans. To make the objective even more difficult, we needed to get the plot planted within the following 7-10 days to be successful.

Marshall Irvin had a field that he had just chopped for silage and was happy to host the demo plot. Between Warner Fertilizer and Janes Fertilizer, we were able to get all the seeds we needed and a grain drill by Friday morning. Marshall's brother Larry pulled the grain drill from Columbia out to Bull Run for us and Daniel from Warner's even came out to help plant the plot. When I realized I had failed to get enough seed halfway through planting, Janes Fertilizer was kind enough to send additional seed our way.

By late Friday afternoon, the plot was planted and I paused for a moment as I remembered that this idea was developed only a few days prior. Had it not been for the "village" of supportive farmers and ag industry, this project would have never been possible. The use of the word "cooperative" in Cooperative Extension Service is to be taken literally as an adjective. Successful Extension programs requires the support of both the community and local businesses working together to improve agriculture in Adair County. A strong relationship between the Cooperative Extension Service, farmers, and local businesses has existed for years. As a result, I think we have all grown together and make strides daily in reaching our common goal.

revenue stayed between $1.4 million (in 2003)and $1.7 million (in 2008), but leveled off at just more than $1.5 million by 2013.

The committee identified several reasons for the slowing revenue stream. Insurance license taxes, which provided steadily growing income from 1993 to 2008, were slashed by 2013, taking a $300,000 chunk out of the city's revenue.

On the other side of the coin, the city's expenses have grown at a mostly steady rate, increasing by 33-percent from 1993 to 1998, and from 1998 to 2003. The jump in spending was more pronounced over the next five-year increment, increasing by 43percent, but only grew 21-percent from 2008 to 2013, when the city's expenditures totaled $1.8 million. In addition, rising retirement rates, which are set by the state and the city has no control over, augmented the rising costs of running the city, and a half-million dollar addition to City Hall further depleted the city's

Another hot topic of discussion dealt with the cost of the Police Dept., which has been the subject of criticism from some in the community and media. Indeed, spending for the department has nearly quadrupled over the past 20 years, coming in at just shy of $1 million in 2013, but Parson showed that the department runs efficiently. With a minimum of two officers on patrol 24 hours a day, 365 days a year, the city employs enough officers to avoid overtime pay, which Parson noted was both fiscally responsible and

"We do operate very efficiently," Parson said of the department. "It's an economic situation and it's a safety issue."

Spending in other departments increased over the examined time period as well, and the result is that a cash balance that grew steadily from 1993 until 2008 dropped by more than 68-percent by 2013, to just $642,000.

Parson then presented a tax rate comparison graph, which featured Columbia's rates along with Greensburg, Lebanon, Russell Springs, Scottsville, and Springfield's.

The most notable difference was that while Columbia's real and personal property taxes were the highest of the group, each of the other towns had an occupational tax.

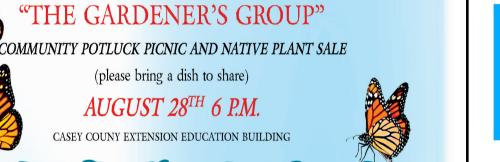

Parson then got around to her recommendation. She showed census data outlining the people that live in Columbia and work in Columbia, live outside of Columbia and work in Columbia, and live in Columbia but work outside of it. With only 17-percent of Columbia's workforce living in the city, Parson said that an occupational tax would be the biggest benefit while affecting the fewest people. Her data estimated that only 520 Columbia residents would have to pay the tax, with most of the tax income coming from those that live outside the city but work in the city limits.

The next step was to show how the money would be obligated, which was a major concern for citizens the committee spoke with, who were unsure about the money being left purely to the mayor and council's discretion. Parson recommended that 30-percent of the tax income be set aside for economic development, specifically the creation and retention of jobs; 30-percent for the general operating fund; 20-percent for Parks and Recreation, which both Councilors Charles Grimsley and Craig Dean lamented the need for; 10-percent to improve the city's streets, sidewalks, and drainage; and 10-percent for the city's rainy day fund. If instituted, property tax rates will be lowered from 0.26 to 0.23, as Flowers noted that property owners were bearing too much of a tax burden.

After the presentation, Parson presented the recommendation in the form of a motion, and it passed 5-1. The only dissenting vote was Linda Waggener, who said she wasn't against the tax but wanted to hear more from citizens in the community and wanted to know the implementation process. First reading for the ordinance on the tax will be at next month's council meeting, and a public hearing will be held between first and second reading for the community to voice their opinions. The date of the hearing has yet

"This needs to be done," Mayor Mark Harris said at the meeting's conclusion. "If we're going to move forward and have what other places have, we have to get it done."

All councilors were present for the meeting.

The goal of our group is to promote education, fun and fellowship among gardeners of all ages and to encourage our community to grow and eat healthier. A copy of our newsletter with a list of our programs, activities and field trips for the 2014/2015 season will be available at the door.

Wet/Dry Debate

turning away any potential revenue feels irresponsible.

Furthermore, businesses don't come to dry towns, as evident by the total lack of incoming industry in the area. Businesses want nice restaurants, and nice restaurants serve alcohol. Dry towns create a domino effect that keeps good food, good businesses, and good jobs out of the community, with the cost being economic prosperity, and the only return for paying these costs is restricted liberty.

That leads to the next point. Buying alcohol is a choice that any adult can make. If someone doesn't want to buy alcohol, even in the wettest of wet towns, they don't have to. Forbidding the sale goes against the Godgiven and Constitution-protected freedom of choice that all Americans hold dear.

Some people are completely opposed to drinking, and lament the dangerous consequences of addiction and binge drinking. These folks especially should be in favor of going wet. Dry towns treat drinking like the boogieman—a scary and taboo subject that should be avoided at all costs, relegated to cartoonish demonization. In fact, it's way more complex.

about it, but it's sold out of basements and garages and trunks of cars. The sale isn't monitored, isn't regulated, and isn't taxed. This leads to situations where getting alcohol is harder than it should be for law-abiding adults but much easier than it should be for underage kids. Gas stations wouldn't sell beer to a high schooler, but the guy with 30 cases of Bud Light in his kitchen just might. Going wet drastically lowers the probability of this kind of irresponsible bootlegging.

A wet Adair County will increase local tax revenue, help recruit industry, bring in better restaurants, increase tourism, and promote responsible drinking. Staying dry means staying in the past, living in a make-believe world that no longer exists. The consequences are underage binge drinking, a stagnant economy, and the restriction of choices that all adults should be able to make on their own.

Going wet is a step forward for this community; staying dry holds us back.

Furthermore, the moral fabric and small town values of this community are what make Columbia the place we love. This way of life is vanishing, and to sell our history and charm for the dollars brought in by a dangerous vice would be sacrificing what we stand for.

Adults who want alcohol can still travel to purchase it, but keeping it at a distance makes it more difficult for people to abuse and helps ensure that our youth don't fall victim to the temptation of underage drinking.

That close proximity of wet communities also means that our alcohol sales would be in competition with their own. These communities have the government and societal structure already in place to be a wet community, whereas Columbia is unproven in that regard and may be unable to properly implement, legislate, regulate and oversee such a change.

Even if we were able to do so successfully, would we really be a better wet community than those around us or draw any industry over those larger populations? Is the small potential of new industry or restaurants worth the dangers to our community and the message being sent to our children?

Make no mistake; alcohol is dangerous, both personally Alcohol is still sold in dry counties, make no mistake and to society as a whole. While others argue that personal freedom should grant adults the choice to purchase alcohol, those personal freedoms end when they infringe on those of others, and the increased risk of crime, of healthcare concerns, and the destruction of the family unit to addiction and abuse all do just that.

Finally, why does Adair County need to change at all? As a rare commodity in today's rapidly-changing world, the tradition and heritage of Columbia is a draw to many who come here as an escape, and remains a strong pull for those fortunate enough to be born into it. To make a drastic change in that way of life could force those people away, when Columbia is just fine the way it is.

So yes, while the potential increase in revenue could be useful, there are other ways to improve our local economy without making such a devilish deal. The influx of money from going wet would almost certainly be negated by the rising financial cost in police work, jail population, healthcare, and other areas, in addition to the irreparable damage to the long-standing image and quality of the community we all know and love.

In short, those supporting a wet Adair County should be careful what they wish for, lest they lose what they already have.

This is your community. Join the debate. Readers are encouraged to send in letters sharing their opinions on this matter.

"Of course the parents be sad was difficult, but everything else went very smooth," Combs said. "Everyone was really helpful. The moment we stepped out of the car there were four or five people there to help us.

Combs said that even after he, his brother and Franklin said goodbye to their parents, they continued to hear from them throughout the day.

"Both of our parents have been lighting up our phones since they left," Combs said.

with a new show, "Invictus: Defiant Dreams."

"This year's show is inspired by the poem 'Still I Rise' by Maya Angelou," band director Tom Case says. "We feature quotes from the poem throughout the show-it's all about overcoming fears and anxiety to achieve dreams."

The show is far from a finished product at this early stage in the season, and one-third of it, or about three minutes, will be performed Saturday.

Adair headlines a distinguished group of 16 high school bands that will be performing, including Nashville's Fred J. Paige High School, led by former Adair Asst. band director Matt Emerson. Case says that he expects Class AAA, Adair's class, to be especially entertaining.

"There's going to be a lot of good bands here, but three-A is really loaded," Case says.

"A lot of us are wearing many different hats that day, but it should be a lot of fun," Case says. "We've brought in a nationally-recognized judging panel, which has helped bring in so many quality bands, so it should be a really good day."

The 95 students marching for Adair this year, ranging from seventh graders to seniors, began work on this year's show more than a month ago, and Case is pleased with the results thus far.

"We're thrilled with where we're at so far," Case says. "It's still early, so we're inconsistent, but you can see the potential for sure. I've been pleased with a lot—our senior leadership, how we're leading by example, and our enthusiasm and energy."

Blake Spires SPORTS WRITER

The NFL preseason is in its dress rehearsal stage, which means football fanatics across the country are getting a glimpse at their favorite teams and how the depth charts, new schemes, breakout players and overall outlook have shaken out after a long spring and summer. To many, or even most, of the football world, that also means it's harvest time for another season of fantasy football.

Across the country, and even the world, the NFL and fantasy football are massively popular. Leagues exist in a variety ofstates, regions, and cultures, but despite this, there are a few absolute certainties to the cast of characters you see within them. While all leagues may not have all of these, it's a virtual guarantee that almost every league will have at least one. And here they are, in the Fantasy League Owner Rundown:

The Former Player: In a game filled with fans of a sport, it's inevitable that many of those fans also played the sport they love today. In the Fantasy world, that gives him unprecedented and infallible understanding of football. Whether he scored four touchdowns in a game for Polk High, or rode the pine at Local County Tech, these former gridiron glory giants will let you know at every turn why their player is better than yours—after all, they played the game at its low-to-medium level.

The Stat Geek: The natural enemy of The Former Player, the Stat Geek has virtually no real football knowledge, and even less interest in watching the games or trying to acquire any. Instead, The Stat Geek comes equipped with his Microsoft Excel spreadsheet full of data on every player in the league, as well as a statistical analysis and projection of his future performance. There's an indeterminate probability of The Stat Geek winning your league, but a 100-percent chance he'll annoy you on Draft Day.

The Homer: If Stat Geek and Former Player are at odds based on life experience and statistical data, The Homer serves as the rival to both. He has tons of experience, and a multitude of often useless data, except, as his name suggests, it's all for one team. The Homer drafts loads of players from his favorite team with the unbridled enthusiasm of a child that thinks his father could easily be UFC Heavyweight Champion. You have no chance of defeating The Homer, because all of hisplayers are poised for record setting seasons as the team wins every game by a thousand points.

The Draft and Dodge: No matter the stakes, the Draft and Dodge owner finds his way into every fantasy league in existence. He'll be there on Draft Day, usually at the invite of someone you didn't initially want in the league anyway, and then you'll never see him again.

His starting lineup will be set by default based on the players he drafted first, and will remain set for the duration of the season despite injuries, suspensions, or even retirement. The Draft and Dodge doesn't care that he has two players that could have made a difference for an owner who's paying attention to his squad, so your trade proposal is in vain. Just pray that you get to face him late in the season so that a fluke loss to him that keeps you from the playoffs is less likely.

The Bad Luck Loser: Speaking of fluke losses, The Bad Luck Loser is undefeated in his ten years of fantasy football domination-except for all these really bogus times when something happened that would totally never happen again in a million years and that the other guy completely did by accident, you lucky jerk. His team is flawless until marred by injuries, or bad games, or strong performances by an opponent, but his trash talk and mental recollection of the league is forever pristine.

Trade Guy: There can be multiple Trade Guys in every league, and oftentimes there are at least two—yet they have completely opposite viewpoints. The first Trade Guy wants to make a move-any move, every move, this move, that move, no matter how ridiculously in his favor it appears to be to everyone but him. He'll even negotiate so that it's only twice as valuable to him as it is to you—all because the two of you go way back, man.

Then there's his counterpart, Trade Guy 2.0. Despite his name, Trade Guy 2.0 will actually never trade with anyone, but more importantly, doesn't want anyone else trading either. In a world where NFL players were cloned and two copies could be drafted, he wouldvoice concerns over a trade of the two clones in order to prevent those owners from conspiring to load up one team and split the profits.

Pay You Later Guy: Speaking of profits, if you're in a league that charges an admission fee and delivers the collection to the winner, don't start doing the math on potential earnings just yet. Pay You Later Guy is a longtime friend, who wears longtime shirts, with longtime wrinkles, that will absolutely get that twenty bucks to you next Friday, dude.

If 10 buddies agreed to pay $10 each, the winner should count on taking home about 70 bucks. Pay You Later Guy sees no reason for dues to be paid up front--I mean, we're all friends here, right? Come week 14 however, Pay You Later Guy is going to suddenly remember he never gave you that 20-spot if his team is 12-2. Bank on it.

That's just a few of the potential owners you're certain to encounter in your fantasy football career. Just missing the top seven-plus-one list were: Guy Who Doesn't Understand But Joined Because You Needed One More, Little Brother of Someone You Won't Invite Back Next Season, and Everyone's Boss Who You Can't Talk Smack To—among dozens of other colorful archetypes that make the game within the game of fantasy football such an incredibly yearly tradition.

Blue Raiders give back at Sugarfoot Farm Rescue

Members of the Lindsey Wilson cross country and track and field teams recently gave a helping hand at the Sugarfoot Farm Rescue, a local community service project.

The Blue Raider student-athletes painted barns, washed animals, completed yard work and spent time playing with the large number of animals up for adoption.

"Anytime we have the opportunity to give back and help out local organizations is always great," said head coach Jamaine Gordon. "It brought out a different side in our student-athletes that you don't always see in practice or training. It showed that they care about the surrounding community that always shows us great support." Sugarfoot Farms, located in Columbia, Ky., is a nonprofit, volunteer run animal shelter for abandoned dogs and horses attempting to help reduce the pet population and improve the care of the animals. Sugarfoot Farms provides a fenced off area for animals to roam and helps to find homes for pets through their adoption services. This was the first local community service project the team has completed this year, with plans on completing for five or 10 years in the past, so we're really trying to do that on a regular basis."

The one area of discussion focused on the timeline for Blue & Co. to complete their work and return proposal is limited to those who returning students. It was bunk. Our excretory processes their findings. Last year, their first in working with Westlake, the firm waded through changes in hospital management and other difficult financial misdirection, causing a delay in a completion of the convictions. audit and reports. This year, CEO Neal Gold says he expects a much smoother process.

"Now that they're familiar with the hospital and the layout of the finances, things should go much faster this year," he said.

Board member David Herbst originally posed the question about a timeline for completion, and member Brad Keltner referenced a statement made by a Blue & Co. representative that said the work could be completed by December.

"They said December, so we can say, 'Alright, we'll even give you to January,' and they should have no excuse to not meet that," Keltner explained.

"Do we put any type of monetary consideration in there," board member Bruce White asked. "We can't really do anything to hold them to it, but we can put something in there."

Herbst echoed those comments, adding that it could be made clear that if the timeline was not met, the contract would not be renewed the following year. With that established, the board voted unanimouslyto grant CEO Gold permission to negotiate with Blue & Co. on a timeline and enter into an agreement for the 2014 fiscal year. The agreement is for $60,000 in audit fees, plus an additional out-of-pocket expense fee that will not exceed $12,500. "I see audits all the time," Herbst said. "The one thing I've found is that they are absolutely necessary. They tell you that all your money is in the right place and accounted for." "The biggest thing to come out of last year's [audit] was to look at the progress made year-to-year," Gold added. "It's been about a million dollar improvement each year as we continue working toward that break-even point."

A New Culture at Adair County High School

Personal Greatness: GRIT Goal Driven, Resilient, Influential Teens

By Robin Loy

The Personal Greatness: GRIT model for Adair County High School and all of the 23 Race to the Top-District (RTT-D) high schools participating in the grant has now been developed by Franklin Covey and the kid-FRIENDLy RTT-D leadership, and is ready to transform the high school experience. The process of developing and shaping teens who are Goal Driven, Resilient, and Influential in their schools and communities began at ACHS on Monday Night Aug. 11, during freshman orientation. This is just the beginning of a major culture shift happening not only at Adair County High but at high schools across the kid-FRIENDLy RTT-D Green River and Ohio Valley Educational Cooperatives (GRECC and OVEC).

"The Adair County High faculty and staff spent many hours during early release Fridays last year learning and discussing the Leader in Me work. We had great sessions brainstorming about how the process could be applied at our high school effectively," says ACHS principal Troy Young. "A major concern that kept coming up during our book study was that almost all of the schools who are successfully implementing Leader In Me are elementary and middle schools. Our faculty loved what we were learning, but we questioned whether we could make this work at our high school. However, we have a great staff who is committed to making Adair County High a place where students are excited to be, and the GRIT model will give us direction and the opportunity to be really innovative in developing student leaders and transforming our school. We have a unique chance to create something that other schools will want to emulate. Our faculty is fully embracing the Seven Habits of Highly Effective People and we are all ready to be better people and charge ahead as leaders in implementing the Personal Greatness:GRIT model."

GRIT addresses the need to develop a process at the high school level that builds upon the great work of Leader in Me at the elementary and middle school levels. It acknowledges that learners at the high school level are maturing and require a more advanced process to be in place to promote growth in leadership qualities. To distinguish the high school work from Leader in Me at the lower grade levels, the high school

PERSONAL process will be referred to as GREATNESS: GRIT not Leader in Me.

G-Goal Driven R-Resilent I-Influential T-Teens

The GRIT process, incorporates and builds upon Dr. all about. Stephen Covey's Eighth Habit: Finding Your Voice, in addition to the Seven Habits. Everyone in the school is viewed as a potential leader in the school and community. Adair County High School is excited to embark upon the GRIT journey and has already formed a teacher GRIT Team for the year. A student GRIT team will be formed soon after school begins and will be called upon to lead this work in the school.

GRIT teacher leader and U. S. History teacher, Tina Watson said, "Our first undertaking as a teacher GRIT team has been to transform our freshman orientation. GRIT team member and math teacher, Dawn Baker, suggested that we try a new approach and we received lots of positive feedback on the restructuring of the night. The Student Ambassadors, led by school counselor Ann Young, also played a key role in making the night a success. They really stepped up as leaders in the school and were able to answer questions and address concerns from a student perspective. The night also gave us a great opportunity to briefly introduce the 7 Habits to our freshmen and their parents. Mr. Chase Coffey, math teacher and GRIT member, has worked very hard to create presentations and activities to engage our students and families as we undertake this process when school begins."

Adair County High invites you to learn as much as you can about the Seven Habits and the Eighth Habit of Highly Effective People as we embrace these timeless principles and apply them at school. The changes we seek won't happen overnight but we are committed to seeing that the process continues to evolve and improves

Dr. Stephen Covey said, "Life is really about coming home." The ACHS family believes that all college and career readiness efforts begin at home with your family. We know that the families we serve come in all shapes and sizes, but the beauty of living the Habits is that they can be applied to and will work in any situation if you give them a chance.

The Leader in Me and Personal Greatness: GRIT work will be game changers for our school district and community if we will all embrace and work to live by the habits. We have a shared responsibility to ensure that every learner in our school district has opportunities to find their voice and leave Adair County High School as people we are proud to call our neighbors. Ultimately, that is what college and career readiness is
